

EMAIL's SENT July 1 2019

This is former Senator David Vitter, following up on some very important developments in Libya.

Libyan Government of National Accord (GNA) forces dealt Khalifa Haftar a major defeat recently when they successfully took Gharyan, Haftar's key military outpost about 50 miles south of Tripoli. Having taken the compound, they then made a startling discovery.

They uncovered a cache of four US-made Javelin anti-tank missiles there, valued at $170,000 each. See the attached New York Times and Reuters articles for details and photographs.

According to the markings on the missiles, they were transferred by the US to the United Arab Emirates (UAE) in 2008. The UAE is well-known to be a leading regional supporter of Haftar.

There are also reports from the ground that the Haftar forces destroyed several of their own weapons stockpiles as they retreated, suggesting many additional illegal weapons.

The UAE transferring these weapons to Haftar would be both a violation of their key commitments to the US in procuring the weapons and a violation of significant UN resolutions regarding Libya.

It is apparently a striking example of a broader problem— supposed US allies in the region acting against US law, policies, and interests in supporting Haftar. Haftar has openly declared war on the US- and UN-backed GNA, declaring jihad in the process; he has blown up the peace/national unification process for now as a result; and he is accused of serious war crimes.

We certainly think this demands strong congressional inquiry and action, and we look forward to following up with you about this.

Thank you.

David

I wanted to email you again regarding some very important recent developments in Libya. As you know from my email last week, the Libyan Government of National Accord (GNA) forces dealt Khalifa Haftar a major defeat recently when they successfully took Gharyan, Haftar's key military outpost about 50 miles south of Tripoli. Having taken the compound, they then made a startling discovery. They uncovered a cache of four US-made Javelin anti-tank missiles there, valued at $170,000 each. See the attached New York Times and Reuters articles for details and photographs. According to the markings on the missiles, they were transferred by the US to the United Arab Emirates (UAE) in 2008. The UAE is well-known to be a leading regional supporter of Haftar.

There are also reports from the ground that the Haftar forces destroyed several of their own weapons stockpiles as they retreated, suggesting many additional illegal weapons. The UAE transferring these weapons to Haftar would be both a violation of their key commitments to the US in procuring the weapons and a violation of significant UN resolutions regarding Libya.

It is apparently a striking example of a broader problem— supposed US allies in the region acting against US law, policies, and interests in supporting Haftar.
